How will instructors be compensated?
Faculty Compensation

- Regular faculty may teach the seminar as part of their regular instructional load with no additional compensation.

- Regular faculty may teach the seminar as an overload and may either be compensated for this extra effort or may request a course load reduction in the subsequent semester. They may elect to have their overload stipend placed into a dedicated expense account.

- Staff members must hold a graduate degree to teach the seminar. They may teach as part of their regular duties with no additional compensation.

- Staff members teaching at times when they are not expected to be performing their regular job duties will be compensated for this extra effort.